His fall was a great shock to his many friends and the Department, where he have the same risks of Certainly they all have the same risks of the same." Said he "Certainly they all have the same risks of the same."

Last Monday a man, neiting for Drummond, a clerk in a department at Washington, who knew Howgate web, was in a book store in upper Broatsway, when a man entered who resembled the fugility. When Howgate left Washington, he was a large, handsome main, weighing 189 pounds, forty-seven years old. The man who came out of the store was evidently sixty years old, bent, thin, gray-haired and grizzly bearded. Still, there was a reminiscence of Howgate about him.

The agent talked to him and mentioned rare old books. The theme touched Howgate. He grew responsive, and handing the agent a card inscribed "Henry Williams, dealer in old and rare prints. The agent went and became satisfied that Williams was no other than the much-wanted Howgate. On the thing the six years Howgate, as Williams, has kept a secondhand book store in the basement of 89 Fourth avenue.

This morning Detective Drummond and some of his men watched Howgate come out of his store and arrested him.

Drummond asked him if he was not Capt. Howgate.

He was taken to the Federal Building and detained until the papers in the case were drawn up.

At the time Howgate's defalcation was discovered, it was repeatedly and openly stated that numerous other officials. Some much higher in position than Howgate, were implicated in the frauds. Howgate, besides being Chief of the Weather Bureau, was also the disbursing officer of the Bureau, and was thus afforded vast opportunities for stealing. Howgate has had most extraordinary good luck in escaping recognition in New York. In speaking of his good fortune to Deputy United States Marshal Trantfield, who took him to Ludlow street jall this afternoon, he made the following most remarkable statement:

(Ely Associated Press.)
ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 27.—Late last evening reports were circulated about Ithaca to the effect that two students of Cornell University, Andrew D. Johnson and C. Dewitt Goodney, were drowned in Cayuga Lake while out canoeing. The particulars of the affair, as ascertained by the Associated Press reporter, are vis's boat landing for a pleasure trip down the lake, expecting to return at 4 o'clock. At the appointed time Mr. Goodnew's brother, a Senior in Cornell, started for the athletic field, where he had arranged to meet them, but he could not find them.

Nothing was feared at their not returning until late in the evening, when their friends became very anxious. Telegrams of inquiry were sent to all the points on the lake and search parties were organized.

This morning, about 5 o'clock, Charles Courtney, the oarsman, and H. P. Goodnew, who were aboard the new Cornell 'Varsity launch, discovered the cance that the students had engaged warning three days ago, is keeping close overturned, about two miles down the watch of the unwelcome visitor, and this cance that the students had engaged lake, on the west side.

The missing students were members of the Class of '98. Mr. Johnson's home is in Chicago, and young Goodnew lived in Brooklyn. Every effort is being made to clear the mystery up, and it is earnestly hoped that the worst fears will not be realized. The present incident strikingly recalls the sad drowning of Prof. Merriam and Miss Yeargin last Fall, both of whom were members of the University faculty, WATERTOWN, N.
